There land is cheaper, and labour is cheaper also. One great cause of the expense of rents in the Colony is the guilds of contractors, carpenters, masons and others, who unite together in the most powerful manner, and thereby defeat every scheme for building.

It is a matter of regret that so few the Portuguese in the Colony have funds their own wherewith they might build the class of house which they so much desire I fear that the Kennedy Road would not at all prove an easy one for the proposed purpose; as there are upon it only two or three possible sites, and these would cost much to work. Then there would be neither water, nor gas, nor Police, all of which are necessary for security and comfort.

As you point out in your article, the Government could hardly go out of its way to provide houses for the accommodation those who are not British subjects; and Banks will most probably leave the difficulty to be met by private enterprise, which, ever ready to supply any real and important One thing is quite certain and youd all cavil, viz. that the so-called house allowance which is made in lieu of accommodation is often most absurdly inadequate. > TALK FROM TOWN. (From Our Own Correspondent.)

The Haster holidays are about over now and I suppose one need not be very implous to breathe a thankful sigh to-Goodness, that they are. London on the holiday is not an over-pleasant place, and the worst of it all is that all auburban London is equally, as Edward Terry would say, "loose and carsiess," so that if you wish to escape it, you must either stay at home, or go many miles away. Stay at home, say I, for does not Easter revelry extend to many miles away for else bury yourself in the depth of the bountry. How sad y solemn this green country looks after the diaginess of Town, and get it lacks the solidity and grandeur of this gay Babylon. " He that is tired of London, is thred of life, for there is in London all that the heart can desire," for-yes, do I quote the thinker rightly when I say-

"So little done, so much to do."

I felt "good" on Easter Monday, and all through going to the play. How the purifession. But there it is. I wandered to quoth I, and which of us has metal to be proud of ?-and bent on never seeing her erring daughter again after her running away with "a man." > I must say that we are doing our best to help your famine-stricken country. But nobody here, who has never been in China or India has the faintest notion what such a famine means. We know so little of the world. How can we learn more "I have been round the world," said a character in a play I witnessed to night. "Sit still, and let the world go round you," was the somewhat sage reply of his companion. I wonder will this alms-giving do us any good; of course the merchant class, those we mix amongst, and the poor devils living on earth and water, will appreciate our kindly efforts, but will the literati, the officials, care one straw, save in thinking us soft hearted dolts? I fear they will, and that they will steal as much coin or rice as passes by them. What a chance for missionaries to make their mark. The practical religion of giving cars of corn to eat on the Sabbath day, will be worth a dozen sermons on the believer in Confucius going to where there is weeping. and wailing and gnashing of teeth.

Our streets at present are all alive and bustling with the recruiting that is going on, and the assembling of the men who constitute the reserves. It is wonderful into what grades and classes this dips. Butlers have to leave their snug berths in swell houses to put on the red jacket, and situations have to be given up to answer this call to a ms. I was told the other day that the budily condition of these reserves was far from satisfactory; indeed, in some sen ed themselves were pronounced physically unfit for duty. But, spart from all this, the anglish army was never in a better condition for fighting than it is now. There is a great deal of loose talk about our soldiers being all boys, but the reports of the youths in our regiments who have been fighting at the Cape, shew that these despised boys are Trojaus when the bugle sounds to advance and charge. Then, as of yore, they charged and-all the world wouders.
